New synthesis of disulfanyl peptides as versatile building blocks for molecular imprinting of non-peptidic ligands. A new approach to the preparation of a library of disulfanyl peptides has been developed, allowing not only the synthesis of dithiocarbamate-containing hexapeptides, but also the preparation of ester derivatives. dithiocarbamate (DTC) esters of the three acids glycine, glutamic acid and aspartic acid were synthesized by treatment with i-Pr2NEt in pyridine. 2-S-DTC-t-Bu-Xaa-Xaa-DTC (Xaa = Phe, Leu, Asp, Thr, Ala, Glu, Asn, Ser) were prepared from the corresponding dipeptide N,N'-dicyclohexyl-4-R-2-thiophene dicarbamate by treatment with [R-I(CF3)2PPh2]+[Br-Cl]+. Stepwise removal of the S-cysteine group was achieved by the treatment of the dithiocarbamate derivative with a cold TBAF solution, which converted the dithiocarbamate into the corresponding thiol function. The new disulfanyl peptide derivatives were characterized by elemental analysis, Fourier-transform infrared (FTIR), and 1H NMR spectroscopy. By this process, several dipeptide or tripeptide-containing disulfanyl peptides were obtained. In order to investigate the possibilities of using such compounds as functional monomers in molecularly imprinted polymers (MIPs), six different disulfanyl peptide building blocks were synthesized in high purity and applied in solid-phase synthesis for the preparation of three different MIPs for the model drug naproxen. The obtained MIPs were characterized by FTIR and NMR methods, and their imprinting capacity was studied with the binary mixtures of drug and structurally different disulfanyl peptides. These peptide building blocks are versatile for the preparation of MIPs and the syntheses of MIPs for the recognition of a large variety of structurally related drugs are currently underway.Q: Perl: 'Octal escape sequences are not supported' A Google search brings up a bunch of information, but nothing I've found seem to be relevant in this situation.
