When we buy a new computer, it usually has a hard drive and motherboard in a plastic enclosure that has a rubber seal on the outside. Often a power supply, and other related electronics, are also enclosed. What are all of the parts that are normally sealed, and what do they protect against? A: There are two types of sealing: A mechanical seal which is typically used for the openings on the side of the case where the cable lugs or the flexes within or in the case. An O-ring seal which is
