Enter your router's admin username and password. Either enter the credentials for the default router user account, or supply the login credentials for a special administrative user account. Click Next. If you're adding a router to a new network, you'll first need to assign a network name and create a security certificate. It's also advisable to change the router's IP address if you're using DHCP. Click Next. If you have a USB device, click Next. Select the USB device you want to use to configure the Linksys EA3500. Click Next. If you click the question mark, you will be directed to the product information page. If you click the Yes button, you will be brought back to the wizard. If you click the Cancel button, you will be directed to the product information page. If you click OK, the device will be reset and you will be prompted to reconnect it. Insert the hard disk into the DVD-ROM, and then select the All Files button. Download all the files to your hard disk. Double-click Configure.exe to start the configuration process. Wait until the Setup Wizard starts; the wait may take 5 to 10 minutes. Follow the wizard's instructions. To create a new key, click Select Device, select the device that you want to configure, and click Create New Key. To change the remote key, or a key that was previously created, select the device you want to change, and click Edit Keys. To save the created key, select the device, click Save, and then click Save. To use the device as a standard remote control or device server, select the device, and then click Set Up as a Remote Control or Device Server. To enable the device to save configuration settings, select the device, click Yes, and then click Save. To remove the device from the network, click Yes. Click Next. Enter the router's IP address. Type the IP address without the "" symbol, such as 192.168.10.1. You will need to ensure that the DNS settings are correct for your local network. Click the down arrow, and then choose the DNS server address from the listing. Alternatively, click the plus button to add a new DNS server. Enter
