Uncoupling effect of sodium bicarbonate on ammonium or nitrate removal from wastewater by struvite precipitation. The effect of sodium bicarbonate (NaHCO₃) on the ammonium (NH₄⁺-N) or nitrate (NO₃-N) removal from synthetic low or high ammonium-containing wastewater (RLAW or HAW) by struvite precipitation was investigated using a batch experiment. Results indicated that NaHCO₃ addition increased pH of wastewater solution and promoted the precipitation of struvite from both RLAW and HAW. By increasing the reaction time, the NH₄⁺-N removal efficiency was 99.6% for RLAW, whereas the NH₄⁺-N removal efficiency was only 90.8% for HAW. NaHCO₃ inhibited the reductive nitrate removal from wastewater, and the nitrate removal efficiency reached 95.4% when NaHCO₃ was added to the HAW solution. Results indicated that NaHCO₃ could decrease the struvite crystal growth, which could be caused by pH or HCO₃⁻ byproducts. Furthermore, the stoichiometric calculations suggested that the struvite precipitation was mainly affected by HCO
