Great Headus uv layout v2 08 crack further skills. Headus uv layout v2 08 crack download. Headus uv layout v2 08.Q: Java: Is there any way to get the current parent component name? Possible Duplicate: How to get the name of the current JFrame/JDialog/JWindow? Like in Delphi (and most other languages) it is possible to store the current "parent window" name into a variable, for instance: procedure TForm1.Button1Click(Sender: TObject); var ParentName: string; begin ParentName := (Form2.ComponentName) If the above code would be accessible in java, I could store the name of the current parent component into a string variable. How to do this in Java? A: As mentioned in Using a GUI Toolkit HOW-TO, "The main idea is that you create a new JFrame and then run methods on that to change the state of the window/frame. So you create a JFrame when you create a new JFrame, and then you use it to call createXXX and packXXX methods, you can then use any methods/variables you need to change the state of the window." A: Yes, there is a way, with the standard Java reflection method getCurrentFocusOwner(): JFrame jf = new JFrame(); jf.getContentPane().add(jf.getCurrentFocusOwner()); You can also get the current frame from any other component by calling getTopLevelAncestor() on the component you want to work with: JFrame jf = new JFrame(); JButton jb = new JButton(); jf.add(jb); jf.getContentPane().add(jf.getCurrentFocusOwner()); A: A way using reflection: import java.lang.reflect.Field; public class Test { public static void main(String[] args) { JFrame f = new JFrame(); f.getContentPane().add(f.getCurrentFocusOwner()); f.setVisible(true);
