A: Some of it is user meta data (like the XML file for the number of users) and some of it is stored in databases (but you want all of the user meta data too). You don't have access to anything that's running on the Exchange server (SQL Server isn't involved at all) and all the data for the information_schema.tables is gathered during the installation process. So, what you're looking for is data that's being stored in a database. Some databases have a metadata table that stores this information (e.g. the information_schema.tables table in MySQL stores the information for all tables in a given database). If there's no way to directly get this information (as in it's stored in the database and only accessible through an API of some kind), then you can check how to use an API or program to see if you can access the database and pull this information. Let's assume you can't access the database directly, and you need to dig out this information using an API or program. Identify what database (or what's happening on a database) is making this information available. Query for that database Get that database Use your API or program on that database to dump the information about all tables (the table information is available in other databases and the information about the tables is the same) Now you have all the data about the tables. But you don't have any data about the users in the database, just the tables. If you're looking for the users (since you want to know how many users there are) you'll have to pull this data off the Exchange server. The SQL Server instance just has the table data, but it's only the data for one database (since you don't know what database you're looking in). If you want to get this data you'll have to go back and see how to connect to the database on the Exchange server.
