What's new in Elden Ring:

Media playback is unsupported on your device Media caption The BBC's China editor, Richard Westcott, explains why China is unhappy with President Trump China is calling on the US to stop interfering in Hong Kong's internal affairs. The call comes as the US deputy secretary of state says the US is preparing to impose sanctions on Chinese enterprises. What is going on? China has strongly condemned a bill passed in the US House of Representatives that would require the White House to certify every year whether Hong Kong is upholding the "one country, two systems" promise of autonomy that was made when the former British colony was transferred back to China. Critics of the bill say it could risk instability in Hong Kong and being a safety valve for the release of political prisoners in mainland China. But it has support from those worried about China and its growing power. A joint statement by 15 major global companies, including Facebook, Apple, and Google, urged the administration to oppose it. "The bill reinforces fears of the United States being a fair-weather ally in pursuing its own interests and eroding American commitments to multi-lateralism and liberal institutions around the world," the statement said. Has anything changed since the "one country, two systems" deal was formalised? No. The formal handover in 1997 was only the end of a long campaign by the British to hand Hong Kong back to China. Back then, China promised it would allow Hong Kong to maintain its freedoms as an autonomous region. Eight years later, China pledged in the "two country, two systems" agreement to provide "a high degree of autonomy" to Hong Kong for 50 years. That includes

What about the protests? The protests are fuelled by anger at what protesters consider to be eroding freedoms in Hong Kong for years. Many demonstrators are also fiercely opposed to the Chinese rule in China. The protests began with mainly younger people who joined in early June over a decision by Beijing to strip Hong Kong of its right to elect its own legislature, which is controlled by Beijing.
