According to the API reference, the dev_poll::poll() function first calls the epoll on the TWAKEUP event and then invokes the run() (which results in asio::dev_poll::run() being called) A: The TWAKEUP event notifies a class that a device attached to the operating system has a character available for reading, such as from a serial line or other type of source. The asio::dev_poll::poll() will poll for a TWAKEUP event to indicate there is some new data to read. Then the epoll_wait(epollfd, &events, 1, -1) will check for new events, and will continue repeating the epoll_wait function until there are no more events to be read.
