I need to select a subset of columns for each date that have NaN values. I've tried to use a line of code that has been extensively used in my search to find examples, but it hasn't worked for me: data.select_dtypes(inplace=True) data.loc[(data.columns.isna()) & (data.index.isna()), :] I would expect this to return a dataframe with all rows that have NaN values in any of the columns. However, it is returning the following: DataError: no arrays are aligned on all shared axes. After running some debugging statements, I've learned that data.select_dtypes(inplace=True) does correctly remove all of the columns that contain no data. The error comes in when attempting to select columns and rows that have NaN values. A: I've found a solution that works for me. It uses an apply method, and I am not sure if this is the most efficient way to accomplish what I need to do, but I am satisfied with the results: data = data[data.apply(lambda c: not pd.isna(c), axis=1)] //Copyright (c) 2016 The Orbit Authors.
