Instead, it will show you how many people have interacted with your tweet in the past and how many people are viewing it. The new feature is in beta. The functionality will appear at the top of your newsfeed, next to "notifications" or "new tweets" as a card. Tweets from a Twitter user will show the number of people who have interacted with that Tweet in the past 24 hours. Users will also see the number of people who have viewed that Tweet. When a Tweet has been interacted with, you can see the name of the user who interacted with that Tweet. The new user interface: Also, tweets will show a badge next to your name that indicates how many times people have interacted with your tweets. We see this new functionality as a way for Twitter to show the most engaging Tweets. But, it also reminds us that Twitter has become far more about self-expression and not just about the updates your friends are posting. Instagram also wants to show you how many times people have interacted with a Tweet. You can also find this information on the Instagram app itself on iPhone. Not all brands are happy about the functionality change and many feel it will cut away at the heart of their engagement strategy. But, this is Twitter we are talking about. The company has had to change because of the sheer number of users and the way they use the service. The company seems to be willing to throw away principles in order to attract more users. We suppose this is what every company does. Twitter said in a blog post, "Over the last two years, we've learned a lot about what people value on Twitter, and many of those values were about authenticity. Whether it's retweeting, following and liking, the most popular tweets, or viewing a large number of Tweets in your home timeline, people are really engaging and sharing on Twitter." c6a93da74d
