Now the part that is the most important part of unlocking bootloader on Asus ZenFone Max Pro M1. You need to make sure that you dont forget to wait for more than 4 hours after you hit the power button to install the custom recovery, otherwise it wouldnt flash properly, as it wouldnt able to locate the original Recovery and it will remain stuck in boot loop. After that you can root or install the custom ROM of your choice. Step 3: Now your phone is running on the OEM mode, when you try to turn on the phone using fastboot devices, it will detect the device, but wont be able to find the bootloader of the device. Step 4: Now turn off the phone for 10 seconds, then turn it on again. This time the device is not detected in the fastboot mode, but it would try to boot into the bootloader and install the custom recovery to flash the customized recovery and also will flash the.sha file on the phone. Step 5: After successful flashing of the.sha file, you can run custom recovery. Then you can flash the TWRP recovery. During the flashing process, you may see multiple failures, most of them is due to the difficulty to locate the original bootloader. The Bootloader unlocks the user space or the part that Linux kernel is supposed to occupy. That way, only this special set of instructions is loaded into memory by the Linux kernel. Any other instructions that want to load to the memory, end up by booting into the Recovery Mode, just like a special software that runs in Windows. One can now flash any custom recovery such as CWM, TWRP, and clockwork mod to the device and install Magisk manager zip file to root the phone and also see all the other features of the phone.
