while the audio quality is all top-notch, the most notable thing about this transfer is how the film sounds. unlike 'the robe' on dvd, the dolby digital 5.1 tracks are rich and complex. bass, of course, is well-represented, with a solid foundation of subwoofers, but there is also plenty of midrange and high-end response. dialogue is clear and crisp, and the film's score is full-bodied and realistic. the screenwriter, douglas, deserves credit for his innovative use of music, which is very subtle but very effective. in the 1950s, the christian faith was a touchy subject for hollywood, and when it came to religion in the blockbuster era, the period was one of strict censorship. despite its pretensions to the contrary, 'the robe' can't even be considered a religious film; in fact, it manages to be both a religious film and an anti-religious film at the same time. the ability to hold two contradicting ideas in one's head at once is a talent that has since been lost on many moviegoers. the violence of roman legions against rebellious natives in this 1953 epic from mgm is more brutal than in most similar hollywood portrayals. the brutalities are also seen in the exotic and pagan lands that 'the robe' takes us to, including temples, a mysterious desert, and a primitive land of cannibalistic savages. in other words, 'the robe' makes the timeless claim that man needs a higher power to lead him to civilization and away from barbarism. but, unlike its modern-day successors, this classic epic does not have the moral clarity to make this claim or to truly think it through.

The Robe 1953 1080p Bluray X264

this really is a new experience for me. i usually stick to more recent releases but this was appealing for a variety of reasons. i'm used to a more studio driven approach in my films, something i'm more familiar with in the theatre. the "look" of "the robe" is vintage. the low budget certainly shows through. the characters are somewhat caricatures but they are likable, and the plot has a lot of intrigue. the themes of the film are not new but they are very human. it's a simple story with big ideas. i'm not sure that "the robe" is the best film i've ever seen but it is very near the top. it's 1634 quebec. laforgue (lothaire bluteau) is a jesuit which the natives call black robe. he and young daniel (aden young) are sent on a dangerous journey by champlain to the distant mission with the hurons. they are guided by a group of algonquin indians led by chomina (august schellenberg). daniel falls for chomina's daughter annuka (sandrine holt). simple things like a clock and writing seems to be magic for the natives and they suspect black robe is a demon. the thrilling sequel to the robe (1953) demetrius and the gladiators (1954) follows the further adventures of the christian slave demetrius (victor mature) sentenced to servitude as a gladiator in the roman arena. there his faith is tested in to-the-death combat and by the wiles of the seductive messalina (susan hayward) all under the obsessive eye of the mad emperor caligula (jay robinson). director delmer daves brings epic sweep to the tale supported by the bravura score of franz waxman (available here as an isolated track). enjoy the extensive julie kirgo liner notes and film art packaged with the blu-ray 5ec8ef588b
