I'm running the last Lr4.3 and LR5 Beta, and I use the full features of Lightroom 4.3, including the new version of the interoperability extension. Although there may be issues with Photoshop 7/CS4 compatibility, I think that Lightroom 5 is far more extensively tested than LR4.3. LR4.3 is a beta, and has not been extensively tested. I never even thought about comparing LR4.3 with LR5, when I switched over to LR4.3, and I have not monitored downgrades in the past, as it's not worth the hassle. Now, I run the same set of photos from my camera's RAW files in LR5, and it does a great job. (7-07-20) Working with images at its best level, Adobe just added two new features to Photoshop. One permits you to pick and choose just the most important details that you might want a filter to grab onto after you "grab" a subject. The other feature is all about HDR images. In that it allows you to work with multiple light sources effectively. You could do that before, but it was a bit cumbersome and not very consistent. It also took a lot more time and effort and expertise to get large images to achieve what you wanted. For this reason, I have never worked on multi-monitor setups in the past. For all my work, I had a desktop and a laptop. In the past, when I tried to put two monitors side by side to spread work across, results were never as good as they could have been if I had put one monitor on each side. (I tend to position my monitors to face each other. This prevents me from having to raise my desk up to 14 feet while I'm working on it with my monitor that's 14 feet away in front of me.) I quickly decided that most of my time and effort with Photoshop is related to images. Therefore, with so many other things to do, I figured that I will allow Photoshop to focus on the work that it needs to do. This hasn't changed my methods in any way and hasn't changed how I approach the software, but I do notice these two new features as well as a few improvements that have been made. By using a device like the iPad Pro, you can have an extra monitor to work in a variety of ways. Whether you are still working on your desktop, or are working from your iPad, iPhone or Android tablet devices, you will have a nice barrier between you and your working area to prevent unwanted distractions.

Facebook Mobile, Google forms, MySpace Local and Pinterest are examples of how social media platforms have begun to focus on security. However, not all of these features are present – or visible – to all users of the platforms, and this could have an impact on the way that businesses use social media platforms.
