A total of 27 HIV-infected patients with creatinine clearance (Cockcroft Gault formula) values ranging from 6.7 to 54 ml/min (mean 32.7 ± 10.5) underwent kidney transplantation in the last 5 years at our center. We performed a retrospective analysis of clinical outcomes and, in addition, a prospective analysis of donor and recipient outcomes. At the time of transplantation, 18 patients (67.8%) were receiving HAART. All patients had CD4 lymphocyte counts $>200/\mu\text{L}$ and viral load lower than 50 copies/mL. A total of 25 transplants (92.6%) were successful. Mean donor and recipient age was 43.3 ± 10 years and 39.1 ± 8 years, respectively. Six patients (22.2%) had delayed graft function, two (7.4%) had acute rejection (three episodes of mild rejection and one of severe rejection), and one (3.7%) had a cytomegalovirus infection. Mean serum creatinine at the end of the first year was 1.28 ± 0.25 mg/dL, and CD4 lymphocyte counts $>200/\mu\text{L}$ were achieved in all but one patient. No transplant deaths occurred and, among the 17 patients alive at 2 years, 11 (64.7%) had normal CD4 lymphocyte counts. After a median follow-up of 36 months (IQR, 26-47.5) all patients are alive and well. Kidney transplant is a viable option for HIV-infected patients with end-stage renal disease. Despite continued immunosuppression, HIV-infected patients have a better survival and better performance after transplantation than other patient groups.[Radiation and chemotherapy of malignant melanoma]. 5-Fluorouracil and cisplatin have shown no advantage over vincristine in a randomized trial. Treatment with single modalities is accompanied by a high risk of relapse even in stage II disease. Combinations of the two regimens currently represent the most efficient approach. More effective treatment for patients with stage I disease remains to be established. Immunotherapy, alone or combined with conventional therapy, may be of f988f36e3a
