Purple-fleshed potatoes have been a subject of research because of their distinctive coloration. They have also been studied as a source of anthocyanin pigments. However, very few studies have examined the antioxidant activity of these potatoes. The objective of this study was to evaluate and characterize the total phenolics and antioxidant activity of purple-fleshed potato cultivars. Total phenolics were quantified using Folin-Ciocalteu reagent. The antioxidant activity of potato extracts was assessed using the following in vitro methods: total antioxidant capacity (TAC), total oxidant capacity (TOC), oxygen radical absorbance capacity (ORAC), free radical scavenging (FRAP) and cupric reducing antioxidant capacity (CUPRAC) assays. The purple-fleshed potatoes had significantly higher phenolic and antioxidant activity than the non-purple-fleshed potatoes. The results demonstrated that purple-fleshed potatoes were good sources of antioxidants. The results of this study provide information that can be used in the development of functional potato products.
