iOS version out now! We have seen in a previous article our first impressions on the PC version of Flamingo, the asymmetric multiplayer shoot-'em-up from the team behind the original Mutant Storm, so we thought we would share the iOS version of the game with you as well. The game was launched a few hours ago and is already available on the Apple Store. The iOS version of the game is exactly the same one on the PC, which in addition has also got the same interface and controls, along with a few extra features. A full list of all the different screens for iOS are on the title, which we will publish here once the game is released on our mobile app:

The Gameplay

You will get a full online experience of the game, with its own servers and dedicated game lobby. In addition to that you will be able to play online with the other players on iOS devices as well. You can register as a clan leader, creating the starting point for your own team, meaning that you can actually play with other clans in your area, and also manage the clan to play in other online games, either with your friends or with other teams. You will also be able to find clans on the iOS version of the game, and follow them to watch their progress.

The Game Modes

There are two modes in the game, a classic battle mode where you will go against the other players in a team. In this mode you will have to attack the opponent team (in a similar way to a shooting game), defend yourself with automatic turrets that you get as bonuses in the beginning, along with a personal shield that can turn you into a mobile turret. You will have to survive to see how the team fares in the longer game. You can also compete in two speeded-up versions of the game mode, Arcade, for those who want a serious shooter and Time Attack, for those who want to increase your score in as little time as possible. In the latter mode there will be a clock and a live clock that you will have to beat. The weapons are pretty much the same, besides a few different ones you
